With the exception of one paper, Part IA and Part IB students and candidates for the Examination in Law for European Students (ELES) will be required to answer three questions (rather than the usual four). The exception is Paper 37 (Jurisprudence) in which Part IB and ELES students will be required to answer two (rather than the usual three) questions. In the light of this, the following further amendments have been made to the rubric for two papers.

Paper 12: Criminal Law
The paper will be divided into two sections and will contain no fewer than eight questions. Candidates will be required to attempt a total of three questions of which at least one must be taken from each section.

Paper 37: Jurisprudence
The paper will be divided into two sections and will contain no fewer than eight questions. Candidates will be required to attempt a total of two questions: one from each section.

To the extent of any differences, the information set out above supersedes the current version of the Form and Conduct Notice for the Law Tripos. A new version of the Form and Conduct notice, which will reflect the above changes, will be published in due course. For the avoidance of doubt, none of the rubric changes set out in the list above have any bearing upon Part II students where papers are shared between Part II and Part IA or IB. Part II students are required to answer the usual number of questions and remain subject to the rubric requirements set out in the relevant Form and Conduct Notice.
